Department of Sociology inaugurated their Sociology Club in the academic year 2022. The club was inaugurated on 16th August 2022 in the central lawn where the students participated enthusiastically through making handmade posters using different quotes of classical figures of sociology. The main objective behind having our own club is to inculcate habits of reading, understanding social reality comprehensively while applying sociological imagination before formulation of our critical lens. The students of the department enthusiastically shared their views in form of manual posters. We will be organising weekly meetings for the same, chose one book, read it thoroughly and apply sociological concepts to everyday reality.

THE SOCIOLOGY BOOK SHOP
EST. 2012

The first meeting of Sociology Club was arranged on 17th August 2022. We felt overwhelmed with the discussion we have around our very first book which was by Jonathan Franzen ‘What if we Stopped Pretending?’ . The book belongs to the environment and climate change genre where we efficiently applied our sociological knowledge about the environmental issues and the ethical concerns that needs to be initiated among ourselves. Rather imposing the ethics and values on society, we must focus on our individual actions and try modifying our behaviour in response towards the Anthropocene epoch.

The major takeaways from the meeting was:

- (1) reflecting on the history of reading
- (2) how and what to read and how to inculcate reading habits?
- (3) how and what to choose before reading and how transforming reading as an art
- (4) Meeting unintendedly was germinating the seeds of collective conscience among ourselves and providing a space for listening to polyphonic narratives.

We will be having these meetings kn weekly basis and I am sure we all must have a lot to share and discuss and learn.

URBAN HERITAGE WALK

(No funds were allocated)

Hestia, the Department of Sociology organised Urban Heritage Walk in the area of Connaught Place and Ugrasen ki Baoli. The main objective of the walk was to understand the significance of monuments in the metropolitan areas, the concept of Central Business District and the impact of capitalism and urbanised forces on the colonial history of a space.

As Mills points out that for understanding the social reality we need to build an alternative lens stemming out from our imagination. The history and biography of any space will help us to build a knowledge around everyday life interactions In a nuanced way. This walk was an overwhelming experience for all of us where we move out of our conventional ways of teaching and learning.

We also explored the Oxford Bookstore and Book vendors on our way. So, today we connect with sociology through our walk and talk with our everyday surroundings.

URBAN HERITAGE WALK CUM FIELD TRIP ON OBSERVATION METHOD
(No funds were allocated)

The Department of Sociology organised its field trip on 'Understanding the relevance of monuments in metropolitan cities'. For which we used 'observation method' for analysing the various groups of people attending such monuments on everyday basis and what is the purpose of visiting such monuments? Sunder nursery in the cusp of metropolitan city offers a place for different classes and genders to explore various dimensions associated with their everyday lives. Sunder nursery is a biodiversity Central Park of 30 acres that is an apt example of sustainability and the go green spaces providing a green and peaceful break reducing stress, depression and a green infotainment zone.

The role of urban renewal schemes and Aga Khan trust in preserving and conserving the cultural and historical heritage of the Nizamuddin area exceptionally great.

A keynote lecture was organised where Prof Vivek Kumar, Chairperson, CSSS/SS, JNU was invited to deliver a talk on the topic 'Max Weber and its relevance in contemporary relevance'. It is indeed an overwhelming experience for faculties and the students to not only understand the relevance of the thinkers providing the subject matter of the discipline of sociology. We understand the relationship of the philosophy and sociology, relevance of history, biography and interactions happening in the societal sphere through enhancing our sociological imagination. Max Weber and his methodology is significant for sociologists to focus on the humanistic method, causal explanations, and to understand the rules of society through social actions. Max Weber as a sociologist is taking us through the journey of social action, emotional action, symbolic representation and rules for doing things. The faculty and the department students were enlightened in his honourable presence.

Department of Sociology, Bharati College organised a key note lecture on ‘Governance by Surveillance: An Introduction’ by Dr Shivangi Narayan, Researcher at Agopol, project funded by Oslo University and Norwegian Council. Dr Narayan shared her valuable research on the field of governance through surveillance that is indeed of significance in current scenario. In contemporary times, there is an endless hunger for information (gathering and collection and using it for several purposes) and surveillance is the way for gathering information often compromising our privacy. The relation of governance with technology makes us think about power and how it can make us do worst things possible, if not conscious and self-reflexive about our actions. We correlate the idea of governance by surveillance with the concept of algorithms that is context independent. These algorithms are then constructed to form the database used for establishing knowledge about certain phenomena, often taken as facts rather the real intention and its impact on developing the meaning of social and cultural and political phenomena in everyday life.

Talk was beneficial for faculties and students to bring the debates around surveillance, privacy, data breaching and governance to the forefront. We celebrated the surveillance week with this eye opening lecture and gained enlightenment in the way of transforming us as a conscious individual.

The Department of Sociology organized its fifth annual academic fest on the theme Aikyam: Unity in diversity: Reflection through culture and literature on 14th Feb 2023.

Hestia, the Department of Sociology, Bharati College, University of Delhi organized its annual academic fest AIKYAM'23, Unity in Diversity: Reflection Through Culture and Literature on 14th February, Tuesday. We welcome Dr Nandini Sen (Associate Professor, Dept of English, Bharati College) for a key note lecture on 'Silencing the Gendered Voice: Stories from Africa'. We feel elated to have this fest under the guidance of our motivating force, our Teacher-in-Charge Dr. Bindu Kohli who always keep faith in us. This is the fifth annual academic fest of our department that is focusing on the role of culture and how it is represented symbolically in the form of music, literature and dance across various regions in our society.

Culture as defined by Weber is based on "the field where man realises their fundamental existence and creates meanings of their life world". Hence, with the same spirit we the students of sociology ensemble our thoughts, existence and develop meaning around the theme of 'culture and literature'. The legacy of the Indian knowledge system is based on reflecting unity through diversity and being tolerant towards each other. Durkheim also understands culture as an emergent web of representations and symbolic systems of natural collectivity.

We invited DR Nandini Sen from the English Department at Bharati College for a keynote lecture on the topic 'Silencing the voices: Women of Africa'.
